The village trustees have prepared ot of ladders for the use of the village n time of fires.

Home spinners and knitters wishing work at home, for the winter, should read Henry Gay's advertisement. O. V. Percival has built a sugar-house on his place near J. G. Hall's in modern style, even to the turning of the key. Prayer meetings were held every night last week at the Congregational church vestry. The meetings were well attended and interesting.

The new Robinson hall was tested as dancing hall on Wednesday night, Bigelow's band being present. The music was very good.

There were quite heavy rains last week, but it was an excellent week for business and was well improved by all in getting ready for winter. Bean & Percival have let a job to Peter LaPete to put 500 cords of wood on the track; also 500 cords to the chair factory. Pete is at it now. Alex. Drew got his fingers on to a saw a few days since and is carrying his hand in a sling. It is thought that the hand is not very seriously injured. A. B. Matthewson expects to spend the winter in Florida, on account of ill health. Mr. M. visited that state more than twenty years ago, and was much s in town. He hopes to close up the Eaton estate while here. Our thanks are due him for a large file of Western papers, giving an account of the receptions of Gen. Grant.

Schools in this village close on Tuesday. Examinations are held to-day and to-morrow. The schools have been very pleasant and successful this fall. There has not been sufficient commotion to excite a healthful interest in them.

Rev. H. T. Jones met with a mishap while attempting to get through that newly guarded bridge at Critchett's, on a recent dark night, and was compelled to leave his wagon and walk to Barton Landing. It has been difficult to drive an intelligent horse through those bridges in the day time, but it seems they are still more dangerous in the night.

Durmoved up and went into the house with Curtis' family, Josiah Elkins came by the way of Glover, thence to the lake settlement in Newport, and across to Troy. The settlement then consisted of Moses, Josiah and Curtis Elkins and their families, Abel Skinner living just across the line, and Mr. Morrill, before mentioned, who lived a little east of the present site of North Troy village. During this season Jacob Garland and Jonathan Heath moved in with their families, and soon James Rines and a Mr. Bartlett moved in. About the same time, Mr. Hoyt came in and pitched a little north of the site of North Troy, and Col. Westfield was organized March 29, 1802, and every freeholder held one or more office. In 1803 other settlers came into town, among whom was David Barber. He built a house near the main road where it crosses the Taft brook, and soon Lucina, a daughter, was born. She was probably the first child born in town. Lucina married Rev. H. L. Gilman, and is now living in Sutton. Mr. Barber raised up a large town and began a settlement on the river, and in November of the same year Rodolphus Reed of Massachusetts came to Westfield. They encountered great hardships in their journey from Craftsbury. Mrs. Reed had an infant only two weeks old, and was in such a state of health that a comfortable journey would have been severe but a great snow storm had completely blocked the roads, journey. The first night they camped out in the deep snow on Lowell mountain, with nothing but salt mutton and little whiskey for food and drink. the first settler of Lowell. He came from Peacham in 1803 and made a pitch east of the present site of Lowell village. He built the shanty, previously referred to, made some other improvements and returned to Peacham. It was not till the year 1806 that he moved his family on to his new farm. In the spring of 1807 John Harding (Judge Harding, whose death occurred last year.) came into town. He came from Barre, Mass., to Eden, Vermont, where he married Polly Hutchins, and moved into Kellyvale on handsleds in March 1807. The party consisted of five men, Grandy a few weeks since is nearly Mrs. Harding and her child. The woman and child rode on one sled, and the provisions, goods and household effects were brought on the other four. Judge Harding often spoke of the sweet night's rest he enjoyed the night he reached the log house, he had prepared for his family in the wilds of Kellyvale, and the pleasure experienced the next day in their new home. Major Caldwell, who lived some distance away, was greatly surprised at seeing a smoke rise, day after day, in the distant woods. He finally made a cautious approach, suspecting the smoke might rise from an Indian camp, but was greatly pleased to learn that a family had moved into town, his nearest neighbors having been

TO BE CONTINUED. The New York Evening Post says that the Republican party has no reason to thank Mr. Conkling for the result of the elections in New York. He secured the nomination of Mr. Cornell, whom the voting shows to have been a weak candidate, and then practically retired from the canvass, leaving others to do the work. "Mr. Conkling's game," it says, "seems to have been to gain the glory in case of victory, without fearing or sharing the responsibility in case defeat. Among the Northern Democratic mem bers, he says, Cox and Fernando Wood stand foremost, and on the Republican side after Garfield would follow Kelly, Frye, and Tom Reed of Maine.
